Which of the 12 basic functions are bounded above

Are you referring to the trigonometric functions? Namely \sin , \cos , \tan , \csc , \sec , and \cot that make up the first 6, and their inverses that make the other 6? It would be a good exercise to sketch each of the three basic functions (\sin , \cos , and \tan) to familiarize yourself with the nature of these functions, if this was not already done in class by your teacher. The functions \csc , \sec and \cot are the reciprocals. The reciprocals go to zero whenever x approaches 0. The graphs of inverses poses an extra challenge. Since inverses of periodic functions exist for a particular interval, so the \sin , \cos and \tan functions have to be reduced to a monotonic function that covers the range. For example, for $\sin(x)$, the interval chosen is $-\pi/2$ to $\pi/2$. For cosine, it is from 0 to π . For tangent, the interval chosen is from $-\pi/2$ to $\pi/2$. From there, you can deduce the graph of the inverses by reflection about the line $y=x$. If you use the textbook Precalculus by Stewart, Redlin and Watson, you can find a lot of information in Sect. 7.4 between pages 550-557.
